MR. BRYAN still thinks that the voice is more mighty than the pen.

THE convalescents at the Omaha smallpox pesthouse are allowed to play ping-pong. The authorities should remember that this is very contagious and sometimes deadly.

THE Boers have lately been capturing from the British great numbers of the mules which we sent over there. If these can be trained on the enemy there is no doubt about the outcome of the war.

CHICAGO has furnished some noted criminals, but one of the quaintest characters ever produced was a thief captured there last week, carrying on his back a broadcloth casket which he had stolen. A policeman thought the action of the man very singular, and the thief's explanation that he was preparing for death did not go with the bluecoat, and the fellow was arrested. An undertaker soon appeared, claimed and proved his goods, and the judge concluded that the fellow would live for at least six months—in the workhouse.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

There is no economic woman—no woman who is a man's property. In her head she wishes they would all turn white.

There is no surer way to a woman's heart than to eat bountifully of everything she prepares.

It takes considerable effort for a young couple to do as much talking about their love affairs as the outside folks give the matter.

Cupid is not so elated over the progress in electrical science that insures a steady glow to the incandescent bulb.

It is a coward who believes in the mother-in-law jokes in the comic papers, and hesitates.

A man who daily tells the woman who likes to hear it that he loves her, has license thereby to do a great many things she may not like.

Water plays an important part in matrimony. It is not a long period between skating and boating seasons.

Asthma.

In popular usage asthma is a term employed to describe a well-known condition; yet it is significant of the broadened knowledge of disease in general that, as a distinct disease, the name is applied in amore and more restricted sense by physicians.

For example, the asthma of which Doctor Johnson complains in his later years, as recorded by Boswell, is so clearly set forth by the faithful biographer that the modern physician is even now able to determine that an affection of the Lungs was responsible for it.

Asthma is often a family affection, and is frequently traceable to parents, grandparents, or great-grandparents. Most sufferers are of an excitable, emotional or "nervous" temperament. It bears a rather striking analogy to epilepsy in that its attacks are characterized by suddenness and influenced by strong emotions, like fear or grief, and not infrequently occur at night, when the sufferer may be plunged from deep sleep into an attack. In both disease excitement during the day is often followed by attacks.

Physicians believe, however, that a high-strung organization alone is not sufficient to develop the system elsewhere, disease of the digestive tract, harmful factors circulating in the blood, obstacles to free breathing in the nose, and others. Whatever may be the source, they must be dealt long-standing cases of asthma invariably develop changes in the lungs and heart which are permanent. The disease can then be dealt with only by measures aimed at palliating and cutting short the separate attacks, and with no reasonable hope of an actual, permanent cure.

For the young sufferer and for those in the early attacks of asthma, the writer would emphasize the necessity of a thorough search for, and removal of, any and every error in hygienic living in order to avoid the suffering of the chronic asthmatic and the further diseases which it brings in its train.

Raw or Inflamed Lungs

Yield rapidly to the wonderful curative and healing qualities of Foley's Honey and Tar. It prevents pneumonia and consumption from a hard cold settled on the lungs. "My daughter had a terrible cough which settled on her lungs," says N. Jackson, of Danville Ill. "We tried a great many remedies without relief, until we gave her Foley's Tar which cured her. Sold by Jarvis & Williams."

Social Science.

In urging the very apparent need of a more general political education in this country a writer takes occasion to lament the common ignorance of law-makers in reference to social science, the distinct aim of which is to determine the principles on which the mutual relations of men should be based. Perhaps the writer is not wrong in affirming that the average legislature is not thoroughly equipped for his work—in deploring the popular fallacy that the citizen of the Republic is born in full ponopoly, like Minerva from the brow of Jove, and needs no special preparation for a legislative career such as all men require for any other pursuit, no matter how simple. "Perhaps he is right" again in predicting that the time will come when only men who have mastered the principles of this science will be chosen to make laws. Before that time, however, it will be necessary for social science to become far more exact and comprehensive than it is to-day. It is still a new science. It has been wrested from political economy for special development and while its ambition is large its established principles are very few, indeed. There is no elaborate system of sociology—that of Herbert Spencer—but it is probably ignored by most of those who concern themselves with the annual discussions of the American Social Science Association. Mr. Spencer bluntly asserts that all our hope of progress is in the selfishness of mankind; that more is to be expected in the way of the amelioration of the hard conditions of life from an enlightened self-interest than from a theorizing benevolence.

There is no doubt that most if not all legislators regard social science as something purely speculative and quite remote from practical life. As in the case of political economy, there is hardly an affirmation of the social scientist which cannot reasonably be challenged. The study has not yet earned the right to be called a science. The legislature has more to gain from a study of the science of law—which is little more than a history of the gradual evolution of lawmaking—than from a study of the papers and discussions of the college professors who constitute the working force of the Social Science Association. The principles by which the work of the legislator is limited are few and simple, and almost self-evident. It will not be easy to induce him to become a student of science primers. It may seem strange, but it is not clear that Editor Stead was wrong in asserting that the average citizen of the American Republic is conservative to the point of old-fogism; that he is less ready than even the Englishman to apply new doctrines even when there remains no doubt of their soundness. This may be due to the fact that each succeeding generation has been educated to believe that American institutions (unquestionably the best and most advanced and popular in the world) were divinely inspired, and represent the highest possible achievement. We have carried democratic ideas so far as virtually to assume that not only is one man as good as another before the law, but that any man is as capable as any other of serving the people as a lawmaker.
